Noted Hospital To Expand Despite Costs

Part of Mount Sinai Hospital's $10,000,000 expansion program — the first such in twenty-five years — will be completed late this year and the remainder in 1952, Alfred L. Rose, president, said in the ninety-eighth annual report on the famous New York hospital.

Mr. Rose reported mounting building costs for Mount Sinai's current expansion program, its first in twenty-five years, now under construction. When plans were drawn two years ago, the costs were put at $7,000,000. The estimate now is near $10,000,000, exceeding the building funds in hand by $2,000,000.

Operating costs have risen sharply at Mount Sinai Hospital since the begining of the Korean conflict last June, he said in the annual report. Mr. Rose compared the 1950 operating costs of $5,104,078 with the previous year's total of $4,789,568. The increase of $314,510 was due chiefly to higher prices for food and equipment.

Mr. Rose predicted that Mount Sinai's first maternity pavilion would be completed before the end of the year, with other units ready by early next year. The ten-story building at Fifth Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street that will house the 160-bed maternity facilities is now "topped over and bricked in", awaiting equipment and interior construction.

The Atran Laboratory fronting Madison Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street, the Berg Institute of Research for advanced scientific experiments adjoining the new maternity and main laboratory buildings and a sub-surface installation with dining rooms and central kitchens are on the "early in 1952" [illegible]

For the twenty-eighth straight year, the hospital's annual report showed a deficit, Mr. Rose said. The 1950 figure being $1,609,488 despite $3,494,590 paid by patients. Patient-care statistics approximated those of the previous year, with 16,257 in-patients cared for and an average of 923 persons daily treated in the eighty-eight clinics of the out-patients departments. Clinic consultations reached 236,185 and emergency treatments 38,997.

The cost of in-patient and out-patient care also was analyzed by Mr. Rose, the former totaling $4,284,000 and the latter $575,000. The sum of $246,000 was reported for social service work for 7,246 patients who needed economic aid and help with social problems to cope with their illnesses.

Girl Of Six To Play Violin With Orchestra

Diane Betty Halprin, a six-year-old violin pupil at the Curtis Institute of Music, in Philadelphia, Pa., was named as one of seven soloists for the Philadelphia Orchestra Children's Concerts next season. A cute, chubby child with dark-brown curls that reach below her shoulders, Diane is the youngest violinist ever selected to appear with the orchestra. She and the six other winners were chosen from among seventeen finalists in this year's contest.

Each will play a movement of a concerto or a comparable piece at one of the five children's concerts under the direction of Alexander Hilsberg, associate conductor. In the absence of Mr. Hilsberg, who is on tour with the orchestra, a spokesman said that the size of the orchestral accompaniment probably would be reduced "to balance the tone of the child's small violin." Also, he added, the musicians undoubtedly will have to play "in a restrained manner."

Diane, whose parents live in North Philadelphia, has been playing since she was three years old. She received her early training under her father, Orcka, formerly a violinist with the Detroit Symphony, says the New York Times. At first she used a one-eighth-size violin and now plays a one-quarter-size instrument. Both were made in Czechoslovakia.

Before the contest committee, Diane played de Beriot's Concerto in E Minor. Later, as a finalist, she played the same number for Mr. Hilsberg. Her father believes her selection with the orchestra will be either the Mendelssohn Concerto in E Minor or the Mozart Concerto in E Flat.

Thrilled about her newly won honor, Diane intends to practice every day. She will present to an Italian half-size violin as soon as she can handle the instrument, her father said. He added that his daughter would use the larger violin with the orchestra next fall.

During the summer Diane will continue her work at the Curtis Institute, where she has been a pupil since December.

Calls On U.S. To Expand Civil Rights

Jacob Blaustein, president of the American Jewish Committee, called on the United States Government to exercise its influence to achieve a permanent peace among nations in the Middle East. He asserted that its peoples could not be mobilized for effective cooperation against Communism unless they lived in peaceful relationship.

Mr. Blaustein, a Baltimore industrialist, addressed 100 Jewish leaders at the opening of the semi-annual two-day meeting of the organization at the Biltmore Hotel, in New York. He said that the situation within Iran, coupled with its proximity to the Soviet Union "makes it all the more urgent that the United States play its traditional role as the catalyst peace."

A permanent solution to the differences between the Arabian countries and Israel "must soon be found with justice for all sides," Mr. Blaustein declared.

"Once a lasting peace has been achieved in the Middle East," he continued, "then the problem of bringing economic security to those people can be better facilitated. The Government of the United States, as we know, recognized the principle of economic assistance as an important part of world peace policy. What may be needed is a Middle East Marshall Plan.

"Whatever the need, I am convinced that the United States will meet it to the best of its ability. But one thing is certain; the entire Middle East, like Israel, must be made the strongest possible bastion of democracy. Our Communist enemies are busily exploiting all the manifold tensions in this area. We dare not delay our efforts to bring peace and economic security to this region."

Mr. Blaustein urged that the United States Government extend [illegible]

Irving M. Engel, New York lawyer, who is chairman of the executive committee of the Committee, said the United States must combat the great danger of totalitarian aggression in the country and abroad. He emphasized safeguarding of

Sephardic Home Is For Aged Of Ladino Speech

The first American home for aged Spanish, Greek and Arabic-speaking Sephardic Jews will open its doors next month. A five-story building at 2266 Cropsey Avenue in Brooklyn, N. Y., has been reconditioned to accommodate about sixty persons who have had difficulty in being admitted to other homes for aged Jews. Language, diet and consequent emotional problems made their lives lonely when they entered homes whose inmates spoke Yiddish for the most part.

The Sephardic community in New York, which numbers 40,000 members, raised $250,000 through its fifty-nine organizations to purchase the former Harbor Hospital and convert it into an institution which would provide a congenial atmosphere for their old people.

Benjamin W. Lambert, who is executive director of the home, said that its kosher kitchen would be run by Sephardic cooks who can prepare foods these people like. "The diet is largely vegetarian although they also eat lamb," he went on. "The food in other Jewish institutions is typical of eastern and central Europe."

He explained that 80 per cent of the applicants to the home spoke Ladino, the Spanish of the fifteenth century which the Jews took with them when they were driven from Spain. Two applicants speak Greek and one gives Arabic as his mother tongue. Some speak English and plans are under way to begin English classes at the home under the guidance of the Board of Education, says the New York Times.

There has been some difficulty in obtaining employes who speak Spanish, but Mr. Lambert thought that many of the routine jobs would be filled by Puerto Rican or Greek workers.

Dr. Morton Leeds, director of the home's social services, told of techniques for making a real home of the institution. "For one thing, we are examining our applicants to understand their personalities, their likes and dislikes," he said. "We will then put them in company with similar types."

PRIME MINISTER OF ISRAEL GETS GREAT WELCOME IN U.S., BESPEAKS FRIENDLY AID

David Ben-Gurion, Prime Minister of Israel, pledged his country to the full support of "every measure which strengthens world peace and opposes aggression." He declared, however, that the future of Israel as a keystone of democracy in the Near East would depend to a large degree on the progress the Israeli Government is able to make toward military, economic and social security through assistance from "its friends and well-wishers."

Addressing a luncheon meeting of the National Press Club, the Israeli Prime Minister, in Washington, declared that "in the significant area of which Israel is a central part, on the bridgehead between three continents and at the gateway between the Occident and the Orient, the future of our young state is an issue of direct moment to the cause of world democracy."

The establishment, in four years, of Israel once again as a vital and robust community, capable of caring for a total population of 2,000,000, has necessitated heavy expenditures of funds and resources, the Prime Minister pointed out, reports the New York Times. He explained that his government had set out on a development program calling for the mobilization of about $500,000,000 for each of the next few years to enable the country to absorb "productively" the full stream of immigration and to establish a strong economy.

"Israel has set itself a target of providing one-third of the required annual amount," he said. "But it cannot meet its problems without increased help, in different forms, in aid, in investment and in technical skill, from its friends and well-wishers."

Mr. Ben-Gurion met twice with [illegible] Blair House, site again for a White House conference. He also saw members of the Cabinet. After his conference the Prime Minister told correspondents that he and President Truman see "eye to eye" on world problems. The subjects discussed at the conference, he said, were peace and the economic development of Israel and the Middle East.

Mr. Ben-Gurion met with Dean Acheson, Secretary of State. Telling reporters of this conference, he said that the main subject under discussion was "how to strengthen peace in the Middle East." Mr. Acheson said that the talk had been limited to subjects which affect both Israel and the United States, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Ben-Gurion's visit to the United States, his first since appearing before the United Nations in April and May, 1947, to argue for the partition resolution which led to the creation of Israel, has a three-fold purpose: a good will visit to cement friendly relations between the United States and Israel, economic and political discussions with American officials, and opening in this country the $500,000,000 bond issue through which Israel hopes to raise funds for its economic development.

New York reared a warm-hearted welcome to Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion on the eve of the third anniversary of the establishment of Israel as a nation. Full honors were accorded to the 65-year-old Israeli diplomat who had paced the Zionist movement for forty-five years and who was making his first visit to the city as the chief executive of the young republic.

Police estimated that 1,000,000 persons were on hand to cheer Mr. Ben-Gurion's motorcade as it wound through Times Square, down the garment district, past the housing projects along the East River and in the downtown financial district. All along the route thousands of persons shouted the word "shalom" at Mr. Ben-Gurion, and he responded with a wave of his hand.

The city's government, headed by Mayor Impellitteri, showered him with municipal honors. He rode in the traditional parade up Broadway as well as through the garment center and was greeted by the Mayor at City Hall and by Governor Dewey at a luncheon in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Heavy throngs lined the sidewalks from curb to building, [illegible] precariously out of [illegible] (peace), and "Shalom Haverai" (welcome). Thousands of youngsters waved American flags and the Israeli blue and white colors and Star of David. The garment center covered him with volumes of ripped paper and cloth. They stood knee-deep on the sidewalks, looked down from rooftops — cheered and whistled, reports the New York Times.

Fire Department boats in the East River cascaded water showers in tribute as the motorcade made its way down the East River Drive to the Battery. Contingents of the nation's armed forces, numbering 2,000 in full battle array, formed the vanguard for the parade up Broadway from the Battery to City Hall—and then stood at attention as the Prime Minister reviewed them.

Time and again, the white-thatched ranking Israeli diplomat, waved to the crowds as he stood up in the slowly moving car. The day's festivities began at 9:41 a.m. when his chartered plane arrived from Washington at the New York International Airport, Idlewild, Queens. The Prime Minister, accompanied by his wife, was greeted by Grover A. Whalen and other members of the Mayor's Reception Committee.

Garbed in a blue suit and wearing a blue polka dot tie, the diplomat expressed the hope that his visit "will increase the good will between my little country and your great and glorious republic." At the close of a short ceremony at the airport, a motorcade of twenty-five cars, headed by an open car in which the Prime Minister, Mr. Whalen and City Controller Lazarus Joseph were seated, drove back to the Waldorf-Astoria.

At noon the motorcade, headed by a police motorcycle detail of fifty and with the Prime Minister seated in back of the open car, headed west on Forty-ninth Street to Broadway. The Prime Minister's appearance was the signal for an outcry of greeting from the heavy throngs who lined the streets. The crowds grew in numbers as the cavalcade started down Broadway. Large signs were posted on buildings hailing the Prime Minister.

The cheers reached a climax and the paper shower began as the Prime Minister's car moved through the garment district. At Thirty-fourth Street, the motorcade went east to the East River Drive to Battery Place where the [illegible] for the parade [illegible]

The ranks [illegible] were 500 Israeli sailors, attached to the Israeli warships, the Eilath and the Misgav. Behind followed the contingents of the nation's armed forces, several bands, and the last car bore the Prime Minister. The crowds were six deep in lower Broadway and the traditional tape showers greeted the visitor.

The Prime Minister was greeted with cheers when he took his position on the specially-constructed platform before the throng, says the New York Times. Mayor Impellitteri lauded the Prime Minister as "the great leader of his people," asserting that Israel was

Bases Loans To Farmers On Human Factors

The progress of Jewish farmers in America during 1950 has indicated that they can be "counted upon to strain every nerve and fiber to bear their share or responsibility" in times of crisis, according to a report made public by Dr. Gabriel Davidson, managing director of the Jewish Agricultural Society, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Explaining the progress of the Society, the report outlines the organization's efforts to establish on farms ex-servicemen, displaced persons, white collar workers and others seeking farming as a means of livelihood.

The report discloses that last year 130 families of 546 who applied for settlement advice were established on farms in twelve states. During the year the society granted, the report added, $384,403 in loans to Jewish farmers in ten states. It was pointed out that these loans were granted on "smaller margins of equity than are accepted by ordinary lending agencies." The society's loan department makes loans "based not strictly on tangible security, but also on human factors — faith in the ability of the borrower to make good," the report started.

The education and extension division of the society, the report said, provided Jewish farmers with information on all phases of agriculture and specialists made 4,038 farm visits and held ninety-three farm meetings and demonstrations with an estimated attendance of 7,000. In addition 3,060 individuals received consultations in the society's offices.

How Old Is Old?

How old is old? Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Schoenfeld, directors of the new Joint Distribution Committee-supported home for the Jewish aged which opened at Nice, France, last month, think they have an answer. "It's not just how old a man feels, or acts, or even thinks that counts," the Shoenfelds say. "Here at 'La Colline', we've found that the individual's ability to learn new skills, develop new habits and enjoy new things is the true measure of his age, no matter how many candles he lights on his birthday. Ninety-year old Alex Kowalesky, the oldest resident of our home, is one example. He's one of the spryest patients we have, and the way he's adapted himself to the new surroundings of the home and thrown himself into our activity program, you'd think he was a 16-year-old. He's even begun to study English!"

Others of the 100 aged and ill persons living at the home, which is operated by COJASOR, French-Jewish welfare agency, with JDC funds, include: Jetty Breindel, 82, who lost seven children and nine grandchildren to the Nazis in her native Germany; Henrietta Lewy, 75, who lived through six concentration camps; Albert Nussbaum, who was hung by his feet for 48 hours in Dachau; and the Metzgers; Babette, 78; Heinrich, 84; and Samuel, 75, deported from Germany by the Nazis. These JDC funds for its overseas relief, rehabilitation and resettlement programs come from the United Jewish Appeal.

Perched high among the green hills which slope gently down to the Mediterranean, the white-balconied building, which is home for these aged folk, is surrounded by palm-shaded walks and a terrace overlooking the sea. Here memories of imprisonment, flight, and the murder of loved ones are fading in the bright Riviera sun. There's plenty of activity at the home too. A well-equipped library, multilingual to meet the various national backgrounds of "La Colline's" residents; radios, checkers and chess; card games are at their disposal, also movies once a week.

The atmosphere of the home has even convinced some of the inhabitants that it is not too late to think of romance. Already two of the survivors admitted to the home before the official inauguration have celebrated their marriage. Both deported from their native Germany in 1940 by the Nazis, Robert and Rose Rosenberger, 73 and 63 years old respectively, have decided to make over their lives. Mr. Rosenberger lost his former wife, his daughter and two brothers, and Mrs. Rosenberger lost her former husband, her son, and a brother and a sister to the Nazi gas chambers. The newly-wed Rosenbergers are now spending a permanent honeymoon on the Azure Coast.

"La Colline" is one of the 54 old age homes in Europe and Moslem areas supported by JDC on behalf of aged men and women who are totally dependent upon the overseas welfare agency for their support. But for those "hard cores", the aged, ill and physically handicapped, able to emigrate, an even greater program is now under way. In Israel, Melben, JDC's welfare program on behalf of "hard core" immigrants, already has some 3,500 new-comers under its care, and by year's end expects to extend its care to a total of 5,700. Like the 100 "hard cores" at "La Colline," thousands of men and women in Europe, Moslem lands and Israel can look forward to years of peace and security.

Social Notes — Montreal

Mrs. W. Sigler, Soissons Avenue, entertained about fifty guests at a dinner-reception in celebration of the engagement of Miss Roslyn Marvin, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Marvin (Marks), Clark Street, who is the fiancee of her brother, Steve Martz, youngest son of Mrs. S. Martz, Maplewood Avenue, and the late M. Martz. Mrs. Sigler wore a navy-blue crepe dress, designed with V-shaped neckline, and slim skirt; Mrs. Marvin, a beige crepe dress, with a round neckline, and draped skirt; and Mrs. Martz, a navy-blue printed crepe dress, with a round neckline, and slim skirt. Each had a corsage of red roses. Miss Marvin wore a red print dress, in off-the-shoulder style, with a full skirt; and a corsage of mauve carnations. Roses decorated the table. The bride-elect was presented with a coffee-maker, a kettle, and an iron, all electric. The marriage takes place on September 23, at Beth David Synagogue.

Allan Melvin Colton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Colton, 2020 Barclay Avenue, was called to the Reading of the Law at Young Israel Synagogue. He is the brother of Mrs. Philip Schneider (Sandra), of New York; grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Pincus Colton, of New York; and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Goldstein, of New York and Arizona. A dinner took place at the Tzigane Room of the Bucharest, where daffodils, tulips, and varied other spring flowers decorated the room. Mrs. Colton received in a brown Chantilly lace gown over a gold-coloured lame underskirt, also a brown net stole, and her corsage was of mauve orchids. Mrs. Philip Schneider, sister of the bar-mitzvah boy, wore an off-white chiffon gown, cocktail length, trimmed with black; and two red camellias in her hair. Mrs. Colton, grandmother, wore a black chiffon cocktail dress and had a corsage of American Beauty roses. Mr. and Mrs. Philip Schneider, brother-in-law and sister, lit the candles, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Colton and the bar-mitzvah boy, walked to the head table where Allan Melvin blew out the candles. Mrs. M. Cooper spoke. Present were: Mr. and Mrs. Harry Silverman, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Schneider, Mrs. A. Colton, all of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. Rae Rappeport, Mrs. Max Isaacson, Mr. and Mrs. Sam. Churgin, and daughter, Lynn; and Allan Churgin, all of New York; Mr. and Mrs. M. Rosenberg, and Mr. and Mrs. L. Tanz, of Toronto, Ont.

MAP SHOWS MOST N. Y. SYNAGOGUES ARE ORTHODOX

The Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America has just completed the task of plotting the exact location of 975 synagogues in Greater New York on a huge wall map. While this is believed to be the most complete map of its kind, it is estimated that this represents little more than half of the total number of congregations in the New York metropolitan area.

The map indicates whether a congregation is Orthodox, Conservative or Reform. Of the 975 congregations already plotted, more than 87% are Orthodox. Since all Conservative and Reform congregations in the area have been plotted, those remaining to be plotted are the smaller Orthodox congregations. In addition to the map, an alphabetical master file of all known congregations has been developed by the Union. This makes it possible for the UOJC office to promptly handle all request for synagogue location and identification. Cards also contain the names and addresses of the congregations and rabbis.

A youngster who appears dull or backward at school should be given a thorough medical examination, with particular attention to his eyes and ears. Often, his apparent slowness to learn may be due to impaired hearing, faulty eyesight or some other physical weakness that might easily be remedied. The doctor may find that, far from being slow or stupid, the child, apart from his physical handicap, is basically bright and intelligent.

CLASS IN COOKERY

PINEAPPLE WHIPPED CREAM CAKE

one-half cup shortening or butter
one cup sugar
two cups pastry flour
two and one-half teaspoons baking powder
one-quarter teaspoon salt three-quarters cup milk
one-quarter teaspoon lemon extract
one teaspoon vanilla
three egg whites
one-quarter cup sugar

Sift flour before measuring. Then add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cream shortening; add one cup sugar gradually, creaming until light. Add the flour mixture, alternately with the milk, starting and ending with the flour. Beat the egg whites with rotary beater until foamy; gradually add one-quarter cup sugar. Beat mixture until it holds in soft peaks. Beat thoroughly into first mixture. Pour into greased and floured eight-inch tube pan, and bake for thirty-five minutes, until light brown, in a 375-degree oven. Turn pan on rack; and when cool, frost centre, top and sides of cake; and leave in refrigerator ten hours, or overnight, before serving.

Frosting

one-half pint whipping cream
sixteen marshmallows
one eight-ounce tin crushed pineapple
one teaspoon vanilla

Drain juice from pineapple; put the juice in saucepan, and bring to a boil. Add marshmallows, and remove pan from fire, letting marshmallows melt. When mixture is cool, add the pineapple pulp; and then the vanilla. Whip cream, and carefully fold in pineapple mixture. Then proceed as above.

The practice of leaving a small infant with its feeding bottle propped up by some gadget is a dangerous one. A baby that is too small to move around by itself may actually be drowned by the liquid from the bottle. An infant should always be held while feeding or at least carefully watched.

The Old Testament As Literature

BY JOSEPH WITRIOL

Even more than Shakespeare the Old Testament has suffered in English eyes from being a "set book." Memories of hours spent in "learning" the kings of Israel and Judah have probably deterred more Englishmen from reading the English versions of Job and the Psalms for pleasure — pleasure in the highest sense of the word — than memories of "Give the context of the following" have acted as a brake, in after years, on the desire to read Hamlet or the Sonnets for pleasure.

Yet the English language itself bears witness to the extent to which the Hebrew writings known as the Old Testament have penetrated into consciousness of the English people. No writings, excepting only those of Shakespeare, have been so strongly reflected in everyday English speech. To sell one's birthright for a mess of pottage, to cast one's bread upon the waters, to escape by the skin of one's teeth, to beat swords into plowshares, to heap coals of fire, to go down to the sea in ships, to tread delicately, like Agag; the love that is strong as death, that many waters cannot drown; swifter than eagles, stronger than lions; the wisdom of Solomon, the mark of Cain, a Jeremiad, a painted Jezebel, a Garden of Eden, a flaming sword, a babel of voices; sowing the wind and reaping the whirlwind, no peace for the wicked — These are but a few of the many Old Testament expressions which have become "winged words" in our English speech.

It may well be that these and other expressions would not have become part and parcel of English had not the Old Testament come to form part of the Sacred Scriptures of the English people. If, by some fantasy of history, England had adopted the Islamic or the Hindu faith, it is quite within the bounds of possibility that the Koran or the Rig Vedas would have found translators as inspired as those of the Old Testament, and that their translations would have exerted an influence on English speech no less powerful than that which has been exerted by the Authorised and Revised Versions.

The propagation of the Old Testament by the Church, however, much though it has helped to impress Hebrew ideas and Hebrew locutions on the English language, has yet tended to obscure the merits of the Hebrew biblical writings as literature. "Too long have the pastoral idylls of the scripture been obscured by the dim light which percolates through stained-glass windows! Ecclesiastical tradition has held these beautiful narratives in an austere and lifeless grip. An avalanche of commentary and criticism has submerged the simple essence of ancient Hebrew folk-lore." (A. S. Eban).

The Old Testament is great literature. It is great popular literature, in the best sense of the word. Unlike the pagan literature of Europe — the Iliad, the Aeneid, Beowulf, or the Nibelungenlied — its greatness is not sensibly diminished in translation, the reason being, largely, that that greatness arises far less from form than from content. Here are no polished hexameters, no cunningly wrought rhymes, no formal schemes of alliteration to break the translator's heart.

Hebrew poetry, in the Bible, is distinguished from prose only by its parallelism; that is, the repetition of an idea in different words, frequently with a formal verbal antithesis, e.g., "The sun shall not smite thee by day nor the moon by night"; "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy"; "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me."

The Hebrew language itself, moreover, is a simple language. It has no subjunctive, no aorist, no wealth of particles, few inflections to convey nuances of thought or shades of meaning. It is a language of feeling rather than of thought; of the heart, not of the head. This is not to say that here and there are not, in the Old Testament original, arrangements of words, whether conscious or unconscious, whose effect has failed to carry over into the Authorised and Revised Versions. This is not to say that the Hebrew language has not properties — the variety of its verb-structures, for example: causative, intensive, reflexive, passive, its use of pronominal suffixes — whose effect must fail of exact reproduction in English. These difficulties do exist for the translator, but they are not as intractable as the problems raised in the translation of Greek or Latin or Anglo-Saxon or Old French literature, and they have not affected the power of the Authorized and Revised Versions viewed as a whole.

"There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job, and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil." When will writers learn once more that this is the proper way to start a story? The author of Job does not devote Book One to describing "Uz — the land," and Book Two to a description of "Job — the Man", and Book Three to "God — Beginning and End," but to one short opening sentence tells us the name of his hero, the name of the country in which he lives, and the kind of man his hero was. Si sic omnes!

The writers of the Old Testament did not believe in wasting words. If a man lifted up his voice and wept, he lifted up his voice and wept, simply. We are spared the description of the two tears slowly starting to course down the man's cheeks, the convulsive sobs racking the man's body; we are spared the comment that it is a terrible thing to see a man weep. It is presumed we know a man would not weep without sufficient cause, that we have seen a man weeping, or if we have not, that our imagination is sufficiently active to enable us to draw a mental picture of a man weeping. Similarly we are not given — except in the Song of Songs, where the two lovers describe each other's charms in ecstatic imagery — lengthy signalements of the heroes and heroines of the Bible stories.

David is ruddy and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to; Leah is tender-eyed, but Rachel is beautiful and well-favoured. Just as, with consummate artistry, Homer suggests Helen's beauty by making the old men of Troy say, when they catch a glimpse of her, that it was no wonder the Greeks and Trojans had endured so much misery for her sake and that she resembled an immortal goddess in appearance — so the author of Genesis suggests the beauty of Rachel when, in a wonderful hyperbole, he tells us that Jacob served seven years for her, "and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her." The descanting on the passage of time which this verse has called forth from Dr. Thomas Mann in The Tales of Jacob adds nothing to the vividness of the biblical statement.

Parts of the Old Testament, of course, are primitive, barbaric, tribalistic, crude; but there are sustained passages of grandeur and flashes of rare moral beauty that makes these books not simply the books of a nomadic desert tribe, as Mr. Aldous Huxley would have us believe, but the books of a desert tribe plus. The stork-race between Leah and Rachel does not make edifying reading, but no tribal sheik could ever have said, as Elkanah said to Hannah: "Why weepest thou? And why eatest thou not? And why is they heart grieved? am not I better to thee than ten sons?"

Mr. Aldous Huxley, in the first of a number of essays gathered together in the volume, Do What You Will, quotes approvingly Renan's indictment of the Chosen Race: it had no art, no philosophy, no political life, no breadth or diversity of vision, no progress. "We may be pardoned," writes Mr. Huxley, "for wishing that the Jews had remained, not forty, but four thousand years in their repulsive wilderness." Mr. Huxley, in whom much may be pardoned, is pardoned his unkind reference to the Jews, but he cannot be pardoned his uncritical acceptance of Renan's extraordinary dogma.

"And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword unto nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Forget, for a moment, the drone of a brass-hat intoning these verses in, say, an English cathedral during the ceremony of the delivering up of the country regimental colours (picture his reaction if the nations were to take leave of their senses and "implement" the prophetical teaching he proclaims), forget that these verses have been worn so smooth that they no longer "register".

Think of a primitive society engaged in a bitter struggle for existence, a society lacking the knowledge to exploit the wealth of the soil, a society which could not feed, which did not know how to feed all its members, a society in which you could only solve your own tribe's food problem by stealing your neighbouring tribe's cattle and encroaching on their pastures and closing permanently their hungry mouths so that you might have something to stuff into your own hungry mouth — and then reflect on the men, Isaiah and Micah, who dared to assert that war was not "part of human nature." Think of the "progress" we ourselves made when we beat our old tin-kettles into Spitfires and pulped our old ledgers into shell-containers, and then ask, was there no "breadth" or "diversity of vision" in the Hebrew prophets?

Renan may have been right in saying that the Chosen Race had no art and no philosophy; he may have been right in saying they had no political life, at any rate, in comparison with the political life of Hellas and Rome. But it is difficult to see how it is possible to progress further, at least in the moral sphere, than: "That which is altogether just shalt thou follow" (Deut., XVI, 18), and: "Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." (Isaiah, i, 17).

It is this insistence on justice, judgment, righteousness ("Let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream") that so sharply differentiates the Old Testament from the Greek and Latin literature of antiquity. The latter may be richer in verbal felicities, but verbal felicities alone cannot make a great, though they may make a pleasing, literature. The "high earnest seriousness" postulated by Matthew Arnold as essential to true poetry must be there, and nowhere is this seriousness to be found in such abundance as in the Old Testament.

It is hardly possible, in a short article, to do justice to the manifold beauties of the Old Testament: to the lyricism of the Psalms, to the unashamed eroticism of the Song of Songs, the pessimism of Ecclesiastes and the agnosticism of Job with their ultimate return to faith, the idyll of Ruth, the barbaric splendour of the Song of Deborah, the mourning of Lamentations, the inspired utterances of the Prophets.

Perhaps a "common reader" may seek to justify his bibliolatry by quoting out of many others three passages only that have impressed themselves indelibly on his memory. The lie magnificent: "I have been young and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread" (Psalm XXXVII). How many righteous men must the Psalmist have seen forsaken in his lifetime, how many must he have seen begging for bread on the Temple steps! A modern writer has given us a bitter parody:

"I have been young, and am not now too old,
Yet have I seen the righteous forsaken,
His wealth, his health and his honour taken—
This is not what we were formerly told."

But it is the Psalmist's, and not the parodist's verses that the Jew daily affirms in the Grace after Meals, and if the cynic calls this sancta simplicitas, who would not exchange the disillusionment of cynicism for the sacred simplicity of faith? "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" is justly celebrated. Surely Quiller-Couch makes too much play in The Art of Writing with the "i"s and the "o"s of these verses — "Observe the I and the O how they interchime, until the O of sorrow tolls the lighter note down."

Does not the utterance move us precisely because it is so essentially ungekünstelt, because there is no artifice in it? Does it not move us because it is the spontaneous outpouring of a grief-stricken father, and because of the pathos inherent in the situation — the father-son motif, Hildebrand and Hadubrand, Sohrab and Rustum? The cry is profoundly moving in the Hebrew — where there is no O and no I — would it not be equally moving in Swahili or Serbo-Croat? And finally: "Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern." They are not susceptible of analysis, these lines: they conjure up a picture, they create a Stimmung of "last days." More one cannot say.

In the essay previously quoted Mr. Huxley observes: "Except for a little literature, the Jews and Arabs produced nothing humanly valuable until they left their deserts . . ." A little literature! Sir Thomas Browne's appraisal was juster: "Men's works have an age, like themselves; and though they outlive their authors, yet have they a stint and period to their duration. This only is a work too hard for the teeth of time, and cannot perish but in the general flames, when all things shall confess their ashes."

This article is from the Jewish Monthly.

Breakfast, that most important meal, should consist of fruit or tomato juice, wholegrain cereal, toast and hot beverage and, at least three times a week, an egg.

Urges U.N. Stand On Human Rights

Preliminary investigations into complaints about infringements of human rights may, under the provisions of the present Draft Human Rights Covenant, take no less than two years, Dr. F. R. Bienenfeld, head of the World Jewish Congress legal department, said in a statement before the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

He warned that, unless provision was made for speedy action in the case of violation of human rights, life and freedom were in danger of being destroyed before United Nations intervention could become effective. A Human Rights Committee of the United Nations should be given discretion to apply an abbreviated procedure in cases of urgency.

Dr. Bienenfeld urged that the right of petition should be granted to responsible international non-Governmental organisations which would act as intermediaries between the aggrieved individual and the State concerned. This procedure, Dr. Bienenfeld pointed out, would facilitate justified complaints being brought before the United Nations which otherwise might never reach them because the injured person, in most cases, would be afraid of being considered a traitor to his country if he were to appeal to an international authority through another State.

Replying to a remark of the Egyptian delegate that the problem of the infringement of human rights was not really an international problem and that there had been much exaggeration in this matter, the World Jewish Congress spokesman pointed out that the suppression of human rights by Nazi Germany had been one of the main causes of the last world war, a fact that had been specifically recognized in the constitution of Unesco. Violation of human rights had also led to most of the wars that had been fought in the nineteenth century, including the Turkish war, which had its cause in the suppression of human rights by the Ottoman Empire.

Tailor Was Friend Of Yale Men For 50 Years

Harry W. Rosenberg, sixty-three, known to generations of Yale men as "Rosie the Tailor," died in a hospital after a heart attack at his home, 162 Day Street, New Haven, Conn.

For more than fifty years, daily from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Mr. Rosenberg would take his stand on the corner of York and Broadway in the heart of the university section of town, across the street from the Yale postoffice, and collect items for cleaning or pressing from students and faculty. When he had collected an armful, he "would hurry to deliver it at the W. G. Schlein tailoring shop at 283 Park Street, two blocks away, and return to his post. He collected more than 200 garments on an average day.

Mr. Rosenberg, who was born in New Haven, operated the cleaning shop jointly with his brother-in-law, Mr. Schlein. They inherited the business from his father who established it near the Yale campus more than sixty years ago.

"Rosie" was a favorite with faculty and students alike who could depend on his greeting, and trademark, "You're looking swell today," at every encounter. Alumni returning to the campus for reunions made it a point to look him up. Among those Mr. Rosenberg counted as undergraduate customers and post-graduate friends were members of the Rockefeller and Gould families who attended Yale, Sinclair Lewis, Thornton Wilder, and John Hersey, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Rose Schlein Rosenberg; four sons, Robert W., Julian, Norman and Arthur Rosenberg; three sisters, three brothers and three grandchildren.

Bnai Brith To Spend Million For Hillel

The national commission of Bnai Brith Hillel Foundations approved a budget of $1,096,000 to be spent in 1951 for religious, counseling, educational, and cultural activities for Jewish students on 202 campuses. Dr. Abram Leon Sachar, president of Brandeis University and for 15 years national director of Bnai Brith Hillel Foundations, was reelected as chairman. The commission voted to continue the Hillel foreign student service program, which brought 91 young refugee scholars to the U.S. and maintained them at American universities since 1946. Thirty-seven foreign students are still being supported.

The Commission also gave its approval to the work of the Hillel Chairs of Judaic Studies. Their purpose is to present the Jewish contribution to Western civilization on an academic level, interpreted by a competent scholar, to undergraduate and graduate university students of all faiths. In addition to the Chairs at the State University of Iowa, the Bible College of the University of Missouri and Vanderbilt University, a full Department of Jewish Studies was opened in the fall semester at the University of Manitoba under Hillel sponsorship.

Among twenty-five outstanding college seniors, including seven students from New York City, who have won Woodrow Wilson fellowships from Princeton University for the academic year 1951-52 is Miss Naomi Paula Loeb of Brooklyn, the first woman ever to receive a fellowship from Princeton. Miss Loeb, a senior at Barnard College, will study English literature next year at Columbia University.

Fear is a weed that can gain a stranglehold if it is allowed to grow. Scaring children into obedience by threats of the bogeyman or darkness may cause them to develop nervous fears that last all their lives. Teach your child to analyse the things he fears and help him to understand that harmless things won't hurt him.

Holiness Versus Cleverness

In synagogues throughout the world the past Sabbath there was read that biblical chapter of chapters, Leviticus XIX. Often has this portion of the Torah been designated as the Code of Holiness based on the verse: "Ye shall be holy, for I, the Lord your God, am holy." In a way this chapter is to be taken as an elaboration of the Ten Commandments itself, with the avowed goal of seeking perfection. Commenting on this very chapter, our sages called upon men for Imitatio Dei, that we are to imitate God's holiness by striving for more wholesome and more brotherly living with fellowmen.

In this code of holiness there are included many remarkable legislations. Especially is the injunction regarding the weak most challenging today as in yester-years. "Thou shalt not curse the deaf or place any stumbling block before the blind." Grievous a sin, indeed, it is to take mean advantage, be it in business or in general social living. Judaism has ever protested against man's inhumanity to man. Therefore in this code is embodied the command, "Thou shalt love thy fellowman as thy ownself."

Long before Jesus, the Jew, preached this doctrine, the greatest Jew, Moses, impressed men with the urgency for human fellowship. In those dim dark centuries when the world was groping for light, Moses proclaimed this sacred injunction to which men even to this day have failed in a large measure to give practical and daily application. For is not our greatest tragedy today that of brotherlessness? Hate is on the march. In Nazi and other totalitarian states hate and the duty of hate are the catchwords and philosophies of the day.

Thinking in terms of Jewish life, we must bear in mind that our mission is that of holiness, with God as our pattern of holiness. We must therefore live ethically, compassionately, and honourably. Sometimes non-Jewish friends speak of the Jew as being clever, clever in business, in the marts of trade, in arts and sciences. But such an observation, for the most part, does not impress us. To those thinking in terms of Leviticus XIX, the supreme question is rather, "Are Jews righteous?" "Are they holy?"

Too much do we speak in modern Jewish life about Jewish culture and Jewish knowledge. Alas, the term Kedusha, holiness, is, indeed, a neglected one among us. Knowledge and culture are important, how can it be otherwise? But these do not suffice for the completion of true Jewish living. What rounds out a Jewish life is a touch of holiness, and in these evil days that have descended upon us it is important to give emphasis to holy and righteous living.

Give us poor Jews but holy men and we prefer their company. What good are clever Jews if these fail to possess righteousness and sanctity and humility? Let us clear out of places of prominence those Jews who are only clever. Let us rather invite those who are of clean hands and pure heart to preside at the helm of Jewish life. Thus, indeed, shall we live in line with the best and the classical traditions of our precious heritage, Judaism.

strongly devoted to the democratic ideal and principle and stood as "the democratic bulwark of the Middle East."

The Mayor presented a scroll to Mr. Ben-Gurion which hailed the diplomat as a "man of action and decision, who symbolizes for the citizens of this country the vigor and determination which brought statehood and independence to Israel, and whose position is assured in the history of Israel and the free world."

Later at a luncheon given in his honor by the Mayor's Reception Committee before 1,500 persons, including Governor Dewey, the Mayor, high-ranking Israeli and Zionist officials, Mr. Ben-Gurion emphasized that his country, given a "peaceful world" and peace "within our own region, would breathe the free air of economic independence within three years."

In three speeches during the day, Mr. Ben-Gurion described his own and his country's affection for the United States and at the same time summed up his philosophy and that on which Israel is built. At the luncheon Mr. Ben-Gurion said:

"Israel's road has been rough, yet we have never lost hope. Israel's history is full of examples of great and mighty empires which attempted to overwhelm us. We were always a small nation, but we have always refused to submit to mere physical superiority.

"We always believed and still believe in the supremacy of the human spirit — in the supremacy of justice and freedom, and our faith has been vindicated."

Mr. Ben-Gurion, was accompanied to New York by his wife, the former Miss Paula Moonvess, of Brooklyn, whom he married in 1917 while in New York.

Mrs. Ben-Gurion, dressed in a blue suit, white blouse and small blue straw hat with blue velvet trimming, was greeted by her sister, Mrs. Rarasa Maslow, of 2177 East Twenty-first Street, Brooklyn; her brother, Bernard Moonvess, of 1286 East Forty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, and their respective families. Mrs. Ben-Gurion was riding with Mrs. Impellitteri, the Mayor's wife, in an open car directly behind the Prime Minister in the motorcade. She, too, was greeted by the throngs and waved in return.

Gov. Dewey, at the luncheon, said that Mr. Ben-Gurion has provided "a new type of shining leadership which has given good heart, great strength and great courage to free men everywhere." "In at least one respect," Gov. Dewey added, "he has put us all to shame. Israel, despite inadequate resources and rapidly expanding population, keeps its doors open as an asylum for the homeless and oppressed."

Henry Morgenthau jr., chairman of the Board of Governors of the American Financial and Development Corporation for Israel, which is conducting the bond sale, spoke.

In a visit to U.N. Headquarters Mr. Ben-Gurion said he was sure the Security Council's cease-fire call, voted at Lake Success "will have an effect." He told U. N. reporters he did not believe the present Israeli-Syrian clashes were serious, reports the New York Herald Tribune. However, when it came to prospects for a peace settlement between Israel and the Arabs, Mr. Ben-Gurion simply observed that peace would come sooner or later — "I wish it would be sooner, but I'm afraid it will be later."

With him were Ambassador Abba S. Eban and six other Israeli officials. They went to the thirty-eighth floor to call first on Secretary General Trygve Lie and then on Assembly President Nasrollah Entezam of Iran, in whose office Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, U. N. Nobel Prize trucemaker in Palestine, was also waiting to welcome him.

Afterward, Mr. Ben-Gurion spoke briefly to the U. N. Correspondents Association. He noted that the Jewish state was "the child of the U. N." and vowed Israel's faith in the U. N. even though he held the U. N. had not stopped the first Arab attacks on Israel back in May, 1948. A photographer's flash bulb exploded and showered glass fragments while Mr. Ben-Gurion was talking, but the doughty Israeli leader was never fazed.

civil liberties in this country and expansion of civil rights to effectively defend the country "against Communist aggression."

"We cannot be strong internationally," Mr. Engel said, "if our domestic behavior is resented and criticized elsewhere in the world, particularly by those whom it is important for us to have as friend. It is impossible for us to achieve a position of leadership in Asia when we practice discrimination against racial groups in this country. It is difficult for us to establish ourselves as pro-democratic leader in the world when we still countenance a form of second-class citizenship in this country."

Chaplain Sees Less Bias In Army

Capt. Joseph H. Messing, first Jewish chaplain in the Korean combat zone, said in New York that because of the interdependance of men in combat, there is less religious prejudice in the Army than in civilian life.

Chaplain Messing, now serving with the 8th Division at Fort Jackson, S. C., spoke at a breakfast meeting of the campaign cabinet of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York at the Commodore. The National Jewish Welfare Board participated in sponsoring the meeting and a press conference with Chaplain Messing, which followed.

Noting that every effort was made in the Army to permit men to attend their respective holiday religious services, Chaplain Messing said that Christian soldiers volunteered to do kitchen police and similar duties on Jewish holidays and Jewish boys took over these tasks on Christmas and Easter.

If combat conditions permitted, every Jewish soldier in Korea was able to attend a Passover service, made possible through the importation of special foods and other items by the National Jewish Welfare Board.

The Rabbinical Council of America, comprised of 435 modern Orthodox rabbis, voted to support the united religious bloc in Israel, in the general elections to be held there on July 8. Moshe Shapiro, Israel's minister of Interior, Health and Immigration, a leader of the religious bloc and the only cabinet official to hold three portfolios, appealed to them for support from American Jewry in "maintaining the religious integrity of Israel and promoting Torah there." The religious bloc is comprised of four parties, Hapoel Hamizrachi (or League for Religious Labor), Agudath Israel, Mizrachi and Poale Israel.

To Save Music Of Oriental Groups

Little-known music of oriental Jewish communities is being recorded, perhaps for the first time, under the direction of the music section of Israel's Ministry of Education and Culture. The section has established an Ethnological Institute of Jewish Music headed by Dr. Edith Gerson-Kiwi, which is sending experts to immigrant camps and settlements to make scientifically accurate recordings of the chants, melodies, and dances of the oriental groups. The Institute will analyze and adapt the material and publish the results of the research. Specific research and recording of the music of Eastern European Jews has also been undertaken. The music section, which is now a year old, has as its eventual goal the founding of a single, state-sponsored-and-supervised academy for advanced music education. Meanwhile, it has initiated a number of activities.

Several noted artists, including the composer, Aaron Copland, have been invited to Israel this year to serve as guest instructors for courses to be held at Zichron Yaacov. In addition, the music section has granted 10 government scholarships for voice and instrument study within the country and one scholarship for voice study abroad. A special allocation was made towards the purchase of a mobile record library for settlements in the Negev. A number of valuable collections have been made available to the music section for the central music library which will be opened soon in Tel Aviv. It will include a music library presented by an American group headed by Max Targ, of Chicago; the library of Bronislav Hubermann, noted violinist, who helped found the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra; the manuscript library of Czech composers which was the gift of the Government of Czechoslovakia; and the music libraries of Rivka Hoz and of the city of Tel Aviv.

Musical instruments, sheet music, manuscript paper, books and other technical paraphernalia are being collected by the section. It has received a concert grand piano as a gift from Mr. Targ. The section also lends its assistance in the translation into Hebrew of foreign music books, and to the printing and publication of music manuscripts in Israel. Special attention is devoted to composition and the works of 40 Israel composers have been sent to all Israel embassies and consulates. To encourage modern music, the section cooperated in the presentation of an Israel festival of Jewish music at which the works of Jewish composers of Israel and the Diaspora were performed. Similar programs are broadcast by shortwave. Special concerts were performed in honor of the 70th birthday of Ernst Bloch and the 100th anniversary of the death of Chopin. Frank Pelleg, director of the section, was soloist at the special performance commemorating the 200th anniversary of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Professor Simcha Assaf, a member of the Israeli Supreme Court, has been named Visiting Professor of Jewish History at Yeshiva University, it was announced by Dr. Samuel Belkin, president. Professor Assaf, who is an outstanding Talmudic scholar, is offering a concentrated course in the University's Graduate Division, made possible through a grant by the Department of Education and Culture of the World Zionist Organization. A former rector of the Hebrew University, Professor Assaf has been Professor of Gaonic and Rabbinic Literature at the University since 1926.
